Beware of fraudulent job postings from people claiming to be recruiters for Strongbridge Biopharma.

We are aware of job postings being made by people who claim to be recruiters for Strongbridge Biopharma, but who are in no way affiliated with our company. Some of these people are fraudulently using the names of Strongbridge employees. We have also been made aware of people posing as Strongbridge Biopharma recruiters and making contact about job opportunities and extending job offers via text message or email following a brief phone interview. These job postings and offers are fraudulent.

Beware of recruiters that ask candidates to submit unusual personal information such as bank statements or utility bills, pay a fee in order to be considered for a job, or pay “start-up expenses” after being hired. Strongbridge does not require candidates to make any type of payment as part of the recruitment process or job offer. In turn, Strongbridge would not ask you to deposit a check into your bank account as part of the hiring process. The Federal Trade Commission, the United States’ consumer protection agency, has online resources for detecting job scams.

Positions posted on the Strongbridgebio.com Careers page are legitimate. If you find a Strongbridge posting on a site other than our careers page, you should verify its legitimacy before applying by visiting the Career Opportunities section of our site and searching for the job title.

If you think you have responded to a fraudulent job posting or been a victim of this scam, you are encouraged to report it to your local law enforcement and to the Internet Crime Complaint Center for further investigation.
